You are right, Clark, Hopkins does have a number of writing samples that are astonishingly similar to each other. Jim Speiser calls these "exoglyphs." He is going to keep these confidential so that they will provide a good check on abductee recollections.

I think that a database is certainly the way to go. I would first like to see some standardization in the way that abductions are investigated so that the same questions will be asked of everyone (abduction account permitting). After that the accounts can be plugged into a database and we can see what correlations there are. Budd and I are making some strides in this area

An archive of Info-ParaNet back issues is now available for downloading via anonymous FTP on the Internet.

host name: ftp.uiowa.edu

IP numbers: 128.255.1.3
128.255.64.3

pathname: archives/paranet/infopara

Back issues are stored by number, from 001 to through 365; only number 020 is missing. Some early issues are combined (e.g., 001-004). The files are stored as straight text, so there is no need for decompression or decoding software on your local host.

Future issues of the Newsletter will be added as they are published.
Issues of the new ParaNet Abductions Digest will also be made available as they come out, under 'archives/paranet/abduct'.

This archive is being provided as a public service to FidoNet and the ParaNet Information Service. Its presence on a University of Iowa host should not be construed as constituting an endorsement of either organization or of the contents of the archive. Responsibility for all statements made and information provided in the archive remains with the original authors and/or the distributing organizations.
